A TIME TO CHANGE and A TIME FOR CHANGE
(The foundation for change is always in the small things)

I do not think the world is going to end 2012. This year will come and go like any other year. It is true we have many changes going on, and this is a monumental year in the field of Astronomy and Astrology, because there are so many astrological alignments that rarely happen. What that does mean is that many believe it is the official mark of the end of one age and moving into another. It is advancement for human-kind in all arenas.

First let's get the all the Astronomical and Astrological concerns out of the way

We begin with the Galactic Setting for December 21, 2012. From an Astronomical standpoint, 2012 marks the end of what is known as the procession of the equinoxes - a 25,800 year cycle. December 21, 2012 at 11:11 a.m. GMT (Greenwich Meridian Time) is when the Earth aligns with the Sun and with the Center of our Milky Way galaxy. Some scientists are also predicting that this alignment could lead to an upcoming magnetic pole shift where the planet rotates over its core and the North Pole and South Pole switch positions.

Magnetic pole shifts have happened before in the history of Earth and happen every eleven years for the sun. NASA says our sun is also going to have a magnetic pole shift in 2012, which leads to larger solar activities and geo-magnetic storms that impact our planet, our communications and our weather patterns. What that means for us is continued erratic weather situations.

In Astrology: They call the alignment that will be taking place December 21, 2012 "the Dark Rift" can be termed as the cosmic womb. What that means in our language is transformation, regeneration, some will call it "the place of dead," and rebirth. This is the moment that shows the end of the Mayan's calendar.

It is important to note that the year 2012 is not only the year the calendar system ends a major cycle but also a year including a rare Sun / Venus conjunction. The Maya and other ancient calendar scholars would certainly have considered conjunctions of the Sun and Venus very special. Venus holds a uniquely important place in the planetary mythology for these peoples.

To calculate the Sun / Venus occurrence into the future is extremely difficult. It seems these people managed to do just this however. It appears likely they deliberately targeted 2012 at least in part because of the Galactic Alignment to end their calendar for realignment. (Another words, this Mayan calendar now goes back to the beginning and starts all over). Never forget - history always repeats itself. Interestingly enough, this conjunction of the Sun / Venus aspect occurs on 6-5-2012 then just months later again on 03-28-2013. The Maya had the knowledge to predict that special conjunction precisely and accurately to one day.

As for cosmic energy having physical effects on Earth in 2012, at this time I can only say that the events described here do not lend themselves to any clear logical reason why December 21, 2012 would be unlike any other day. There are, however, other 2012 avenues to explore related to the 12-21-2012 Galactic Alignment and Sun / Venus conjunction that carries information, theories, and possibilities based on astronomical history for the student who is interested.

Also the Myths and or Truths about the Mayan Calendar

What Did The Mayan Calendar Foresee for 2012? Let's take a look at this Mayan Calendar and attempt to put it in terms you and I can understand and what it could mean to us. .

This calendar goes back approximately 26,000 years to what the Mayans considered to be the beginning (or the creation). According to their ancient astronomers, this point of creation occurred when the sun, the moon and the earth were in a line pointing to the center of the Milky Way. The Mayans believed that this place was the center of creation. What we now know is that the center of the Milky Way contains a massive black hole (as do nearly all galaxies.) A great number of astronomers feel that our galaxy evolved or was created from a black hole.

There is nothing in the Mayan's mythology to suggest we are facing a great disaster on Earth. The Long calendar count is one of many calendar cycles that they knew about and observed. When it ran out, they just started a new cycle. The Mayans did not advocate this end of the world theory; it's our own interpretation that has led to this thinking. When the Mayans made it to the end of a cycle, they didn't look at it as a doomsday event, it was a huge celebration to make it to the end of a whole cycle.

The New Age interpretation of this movement - December 21, 2012 - marks the time in which Earth and its inhabitants undergo a positive physical or spiritual transformation, and that 2012 marks the beginning of a new era.

The 2012 weather and changes it will bring

We have already started to see weather patterns that have changed our land structures and the lives of many. This has happened before but not on such a personal level. Remember, we are now able to communicate in real time with anyone on the earth's surface, which makes us all aware of a connection we never considered before. It is the beginning of the awareness of that oneness the great sages talked of so often.

We will continue to see these changes between 2012 and 2020. Some will come in the form of natural disasters; but in most instances we will witness it in the form of unusual or extreme weather patterns. There will be other things that will come in the appearances of diseases. We have seen this activity already and will continue to do so. Global climate changes have become apparent and will continue to occur until the early 2020's. It's just time for all of this, and of course, Mother Earth is a living organism. There is a great healing taking place with all of this activity as land returns underwater and new land surfaces from the waters. Never forget, water is a great healing agent. We, as humans, have a way of not respecting each other much less our planet. But awareness is being brought into our everyday lives and we are beginning to acknowledge respect for all living creatures and our planet as a living part of our lives.

Even though La Nina faded away this past summer, we will see it make a comeback and its influence in weather patterns. We also will be feeling the effects of what is known as The Arctic Oscillation which is a less predictable pattern. It's a 'wild card' influence that results in large short-term swings in temperatures. I feel we will see this in the U. S. during the winter. The erratic Arctic Oscillation generates strong shifts in the climate patterns and will amplify La Nina's impacts.

Chicago is predicted by so many forecasters to endure the worst of winters. It is clear to me that Chicago could be hard hit, for snow and cold in the winter of 2012, but something would have to change at this point. At this time I see conditions available for such a winter but not likely to happen, although we will have our share of cold weather, and snow. All of us will be ready for the spring.

We will see below-average precipitation portions of Texas, Oklahoma, New Mexico and Arizona.

Drier-than-average conditions are also expected in parts of the Southeast and Florida as well as portions of the Carolinas, Georgia, and Alabama. Northern Florida is already in drought, so this is not desirable news. Florida could emerge from winter very dry just like last year, and could set the stage for wildfire conditions.

Meanwhile, wetter-than-average conditions are forecast from the Pacific Northwest into the Northern Rockies and Northern Plains. The Pacific Northwest is one portion of the country that typically sees above-average precipitation during La Nina winters.

I see a concern about the spring flood season; with the expectation of above-average precipitation this winter in the Northern Plains.

La Nina in general is not a major influence on weather in the Mid-Atlantic and Northeast, but the Arctic Oscillation can be a big influence. If the combination of enough cold air and moisture come together this winter, we will see above-average snowfall.

What to expect from the Economy for 2012

There are a lot of problems that have to be sorted through and worked out in the economy over the next several years before we get back on some sort of growth chart. Wall Street is in its infancy of major changes and it's not going back to what it was pre - 2008. Those days are gone, this sector will emerge differently. It's not going to come back to the way it was - it's a secular change. Wall Street is not going to be as profitable as it has been; therefore people will not make as much money as they were used to in the past. An absence of safe havens will ensure a difficult year for investors in 2012.

Daily swings—sometimes 3% or 4% a day—have become a regular occurrence in the financial markets. This is erratic; just because its routine doesn't mean it's any less unsettling. Generally people will continue fail to protect their assets, because they still believe in a system that has disappointed them and, for many, it has lost much of their life's savings or retirement funds.

We are exploring alternative employment possibilities and this is a very good thing. I do feel many will need to find new income streams and to prepare for many lifestyle changes. We will see periodic mini-surges on the stock markets and in the economy, but generally this is short lived and gives us a false sense of security.

It is my thought; this economic decline will NOT spare the other economies. Emerging markets (China and other Asians markets) can only emerge with strong export demand from the developed markets. I do not see that happening. So many nations having economic crises: riots in Greece, the Iceland government overthrown, Latvia, France, Thailand, the UK, Iran – protests, marches, demonstrations. I am thinking the worst is not over. It's all changing and a new financial world is being designed.

I recommend caution but do not foresee a catastrophe year 2012. The United States will likely avoid a recession. There is a need for a strategic framework to deal with this 'new normal'. Slow growth and higher risks are what we are dealing with and it is unlikely that gold will repeat its strong performance in 2012. The Eurozone sovereign-debt crisis is the biggest threat to the US economy. Commodity prices mostly will move sideways. In the case of oil, markets have concerns about an escalation of conflict over Iran's nuclear weapons program. With that said, the most likely scenario is for the price of oil and other commodities to fluctuate around current levels.

The 2012 Political Scene and the Power struggles

(2012-2013 there will be tremendous cultural, social and political upheaval which will further transform governments and political structures.)

I see more incumbents voted out of office, both Republicans and Democrats, and I am not even sure if this has ever happened. Americans are not happy with anyone right now.

The States - Eleven states have governorships for elections in the 2012. It is my thought that Delaware, Missouri, New Hampshire, and Vermont are likely going to Democrats, while North Dakota and Utah will stay in GOP hands. Indiana, might flip to the Democrats, it's a long shot for sure but possible. The other four States -- Montana, North Carolina, Washington, and West Virginia – I just don't know right now.

The House - With all 435 voting Congressional seats open again, we're going to see some changes happen in the 2012 House elections. The current House, with its right-wing majority, has an approval rating in the lower twenties, which might sound good to Democrats but they shouldn't believe everything they hear and read. Congress usually works with approval ratings well below the 50% mark, so it doesn't really say much about the election. If the conservatives in the House hope to keep their jobs in 2012, they need to spend more time satisfying the needs and desires of their constituents. As it stands today, I'm predicting a majority status for Democrats in 2012

The Senate - The Democrats have 23 Senate seats up, and 2 seats belonging to independents who generally side with Democrats. Republicans only have 10 seats up for election. The Democrat seats up for election are in places like New York and California, where incumbent Democrats are very strong and likely to keep their seats. Joe Lieberman is retiring, which leaves Connecticut for someone new. They will likely elect a Democrat. Seven Democratic seats and 3 Republican seats are up for election or re-election - ever how you want to look at it. I see a Democratic senate but it will be below super-majority. My early Senate predictions are that the Senate will go 55/ 45 in favor of the Democrats.

The White House - I believe the White House is the easiest to predict out of all. It would take some major nation-changing events to shake up this race's outcome. President Obama has no real electoral threats opposing him. It is clear; he is the pick for the 2012 Presidential election. The more radical the GOP are for president, the higher President Obama's approval ratings will go.

Many would like to see Hillary Clinton run for Vice President with Obama and I want to say it is not out of the question. The current vice president would move into another position. V.P. Joe Biden is strong in foreign affairs; but he can be offensive in his approach and delivery tactics with others. It appears to me that so far this administration has not been able to get a handle on this problem. At this time, Secretary of State would not be a good place for Mr. Biden; although you can count on it as a consideration if Hillary is the running mate of Barack Obama.

What have we seen with this administration?

- 1. Even though Obama is charismatic or some feel a national hero... He led from behind. He didn't take the lead in the healthcare debate; he didn't use his speaking ability to move the American people during the recession. He's lost his ability to connect since the 2008 election. I do not see the challenging party candidates considered charismatic or national heroes.*
- 2. Obama's administration suffers no major failure in foreign or military affairs. We haven't seen any major failure that resembles the Bay of Pigs and I don't foresee anything.*
- 3. Obama's administration achieves a major plus in military affairs because Osama bin Laden was found and killed.*
- 4. Where foreign policy is concerned, I see that the end of the Iraq war and pulling all the troops out of Iraq will be attributed to Mr. Obama's watch. Because of this, I can see the* history books will be very favorable to Mr. Obama for his achievements in Foreign policy and, of course, the success in military affairs.

- 5. Obama's administration has made major policy changes, contrary to what we hear, or you would want to believe. We've seen the biggest stimulus in history and a complete overhaul of the healthcare system. So I give him credit for policy change. Now that doesn't mean you have to like it, or not like it, I simply mean CHANGE is what the Obama administration ran their campaign on and he has delivered change .*

On the GOP side for their elections, Mitt Romney is the only candidate that can give Obama any kind of successful run for a Republican for president. Newt Gingrich has lots of experience but for some reason I do not see him as a good compete for Obama. I like Mitt Romney very much and I do feel he would be a good selection for the GOP. I do not see that his religion will keep this party from determining that Mitt Romney as their best candidate. Anything that is divisive to the GOP party as a whole needs to be examined. The way I see it, the GOP needs to move into a more united front; deciding what is best for their party and our country through their vision would be the most reasonable and logical thing they can do to compete with some integrity in the presidential elections. . Oh BTW, Mitt Romney's choice for vice president more than likely will be Sen. Marco Rubio (R-FL).

President Obama is aligning himself more and more with President Bill Clinton. History has been very kind to Mr. Clinton, and our president knows that this man has great skills that he himself is lacking. When we talk the Clintons; we are talking powerful influential people, and Mr. and Mrs. are 100% in Obama's corner. That is good for the party and good for the election.

We are likely to see an increase in stability and a more practical approach to economics and business than we have seen in quite a while. The inflated bonuses for CEOs that we saw in recent years are a sign of the past as businesses and corporations become more concerned with fundamental appearance and image, plus achievements, real goals and objectives as time proceeds on. There will be an increased focus on proficiency, skill, and a successful outcome.

I see many more secrets revealed in all governments and other political agencies. Celebrity figures, no matter if they are in sports, movies, big business, there are no favorites or exceptions - it's time for exposing what people do; and, think for that matter, within the confines of their own minds.

Taking a look at foreign affairs from the U.S. point of view in 2012

Iran –I do not see an attack on Iran by either Israel or the United States over the next 12 months. (But it is a delicate area, and, to be honest, anything can happen. We are dealing with the Middle East.) What I do see is the entire network that helped get us into Iraq has re-surfaced, attempting to encourage the United States to strike Iran.

AIPAC - The AIPAC (American Israel Public Affairs) conference in March will be proclaimed the "most successful" in its history. The talk, of course, will be about confronting Iran. One of the main goals, as I see it, will be to convey to Congress that supporting AIPAC on matters to the Middle East is the only way to stay out of political trouble. As a result, Congress will pass at least one piece of legislation reprimanding the Palestinians and I am sure we will see more action against Iran.

Arab Spring: In 2012, I believe I see the Syrian government dissolve. Just a horrible situation and then moving to some form of democracy for these people will be as hard as it is in Egypt.

Israelis and Palestinians - Both will be dealing with a government, and in the case of the Palestinians, a quasi-government that will be primarily concerned with continuing the power it already has. Both countries will continue advocating whatever it needs to, to stay in power, and neither country will engage in, what I see or want to call, genuine negotiations.

Pakistan – Pakistan's Zardari is likely to fall away.

Greece - I see this Mediterranean nation beginning official negotiations to exit the Eurozone in 2012. It occurs to me that this is the result of Greece's next parliamentary election.

China - will ease up on currency controls. Due to the outrageous exchange rate for the Chinese Renminbi, I see it will slowly and rather quietly, loosen its monetary policy and allow the currency "to rise 6-8% against the dollar. China will see the first glimmers of real political unrest within its borders.

Russia – It looks like to me, Former President Putin will have several assassination attempts. I would be surprised if he survived these opposing political members. President Putin is a man who has a lot of influence over Russia and the people. There are people and forces who want to remove that influence.

Japan - Economies like Japan and the U.S. will be beneficiaries of the Eurozone crisis.

Africa – I think the U.S. will move more toward counter-terrorism in Africa. Particularly countries like Nigeria (where Islamist activities from groups like Boko Haram).

What we will see in 2012 - CHANGE, CHANGE, CHANGE, AND MORE CHANGE

*(Transformation in our personal and global lives are designed to bring balance,
When that balance occurs then we have had enough change.)*

The transformations I see can be a bit ruthless, but it is not cruel. We see the need to eliminate that which is no longer working so that new life can survive. It's all about progression and it is the way life works. Some call it the evolution of our mind creating outward situations to keep our lives in sync.

I feel that over the next little while we will see the elderly and end- of-life issues transform. The way we view the entire process of death and dying, including the disposal of the body after death.

Marriage is more and more falling away. As I see it, marriage can become an obsolete word within the next 50 years. I am not sure of all the reasons, but marriage has fallen short of expectations continuously. Once women gained independence and were able to make their own money to do with as they saw fit, it changed the playing field. Men need to wake up to the fact that many of their antics are no longer acceptable and the boys will be boys mentality will not fly as an excuse. Women want more from men emotionally mentally and spiritually. The fact is, if women cannot get the stability and emotional support they want, they will not come to the table any longer. Many women have much more to offer than men now so that gives them the leverage for redefining the rules of relationships. Women are tired of status quo all over the world. 2012 will bring changes for women and men!

Massive revolts are likely to occur in so many countries that it will shake the very foundation of power and governments of those countries. We are seeing all of this now and it is only in the infancy stage of this revolt around the world. People are tired and done with business as usual. A major Revolution of Independence is likely in so many of the Middle Eastern countries, and other places around the world, but especially the Middle East, that is where so many lives will be lost for human freedom. I liken it to the 1700's when America came up against the British rule. This revolution will succeed. During this time, major conflicts will not only be within countries but break out between countries; we will start seeing one overtaking the other.

In the United States, frustrated workers are in protest against a political structure that favors banks and corporations that strip individuals of their economic rights. No one in the U.S. has been held accountable for the financial crisis: That's probably why we have the Tea Party and why we have Occupy Wall Street. There's just a tremendous amount of public anger at something that has not been properly handled and explained.

*There will be a lot more demonstrating and dissatisfaction in our country if our government and congress cannot pull their pieces together and serve the people. Congress has not been a good steward of the people's money; our President and Congress want more money and don't want to be particularly accountable. At this point, what we have in Washington D.C. is the Best Congress Money Can Buy.

A Peoples' Revolution against Big Business, Banks, and Wall Street will continue to grow and gain power. As the people view the way in which Government has functioned, there is increasing dissatisfaction. This is with both the Democrats and Republicans; neither party has shown their concerns about the people. They are too busy making business-as-usual deals, taking vacations, and securing their benefits and raises.

In all of this, the people too have played there part in this mess also. We wanted bigger homes that we could not afford, everything needed to be super-sized. Many folks had no foresight!

American businesses have gone over seas because their profits are greater; they can get the same help for much less. So the end result was what is good for an American business was not good for American people. Maybe the people got too greedy and unreasonable with their demands. We forced ourselves out of competing with the rest of the world.

Remember, we have emerged into a global economy and the rules have all changed. Somehow that concept of global economy and ways of doing business eluded us; we didn't think we had to conform.

Think about what you are fighting for and let's be smart and competitive. We want our companies back on American soil, so we get the jobs. I believe we are going to see them come back starting this year but in order to do that we have to compete with the rest of the world for their business. The lesson that is here for all of us to learn is American companies or any other business for that matter has no loyalty to America just because they are an American company. Their loyalty is to the profit margins. Money is their power. Money is their force.

COMPANIES SHOULD NEVER BE ALLOWED TO HAVE EQUAL VOICE. I see that as a mistake that will fast forward the downfall of America or any other country that believes their companies have the best interest of people at the heart of their decisions. Money will always rule the company's voice not the people.

The Occupy movement is only one force; more will appear and join their forces and causes together. The people in power, at this time, will not be able to ignore the issues and or consequences of these groups. They will be a powerful movement like we have never seen before. They are willing to do what it takes to get this job done for the common good of all not just the few that appear to be benefitting at this time.

New laws will be written to control the power of BIG business. The Big bonuses, unbelievable compensations and outrageous paychecks for CEO's at banks and Wall Street also will be brought into alignment. So many changes are coming to equalize our people and living conditions.

The Christians along with other religions around the world will continue to decline. The power and influence of the Catholic Church will be greatly diminished. Also I see laws limiting the power of churches in this country and others. The people are just tired of religious fanatics in power. Once they finally leave, or are forced from office through the scandals of one nature or another, there will be a chance of greater peace among nations regardless of their spiritual beliefs.

The biggest enemy of personal transformation is resistance, and in a period of this kind of volatility it is tempting to try to protect ourselves by holding on to the old ways. This will not be effective and will only create additional distress. There is a new world emerging and it won't be stopped, for it is written in the book of all ages. It's a part of evolution.

2012 Health Watch

Among the key issues, we'll see value move from theory to reality. Insurers gear up to compete in a new insurance exchange marketplace and healthcare increasing its social media presence.

Come 2012, it looks like almost 70% of employers will be charging higher contributions for dependent coverage and dropping retiree accounts. I predict ¼ of the companies will drop their retirees' coverage. As that continues on, "we the people" will not be able to sustain that kind of cost. America can no longer sustain a FOR PROFIT health care system. I believe what I see here is the insurance companies' being phased out over the next 10 years, or totally redefined. But I feel their profits will be absorbed by other big businesses and they will just fade away.

The people don't have the money to play their insurance game and big business is not willing to fork over money to them to keep insuring their employees. So...if you have no consumers, you have no business. The insurance companies will literally out price themselves. We will find ourselves on a program that the government has their hands in, or none of us will be able to afford healthcare. This program will resemble Medicare and, by the way, it will work. We will be responsible to pay our part, it will not be free, and Medicaid (what welfare recipients have) will be redefined. That is a system that has needed to be reviewed for many years.

Remember, our pay scale was stagnant for years and now has decreased, which means to us that businesses are hiring at a much lower pay scale than before. Our necessities have gone up, water, gas heating oil, electric, food and clothing, the money isn't there for healthcare. Changes have to occur; this is not working any longer for the masses.

The med-tech tattoo coming soon. It's a hair-thin, stick-on micro-electronic tattoo and has similar properties to skin. This medical invention could be used to monitor more subtle processes, such as the movement of enzymes, antibodies, or pathogens. It will be powered by solar cells; the data collected can be transmitted wireless to a remote computer for analysis.

Needle-less Injection will arrive in 2012. As an alternative to a needle, microporation is a painless method of transferring medication into the body using laser technology. It will be a handheld laser placed on the skin for the transfer of medicine molecules. It will be painless to use and requires no supervision to administer. The interfaced controls regulate the dosage.

The E-Button - created to combat obesity and will be ready to use in the U.S. shortly. It includes a tiny camera, an accelerometer, a GPS and other sensors that track data about daily activities. This will be worn on the chest like a pin, eliminates the need for self-reporting of events like meals and exercise.

Touch Screen Phones! Coming soon... Our touch screen phones to be used like a mini-lab for diagnose diseases. This technology is capable to work through electrical changes made by the fingertip's movements. These phones will serve as a highly sensitive detection platform for diseases. This technology will give rapid results in hospitals, and mean fewer trips to the doctor for minor illness. Your phone will have the capability to send the results to your doctor, who could call in a prescription.

An invisible thin glass coating invention is a spray-on invisible thin glass coating that sterilizes, protects and strengthens surfaces. It repels water, dirt, stains, mildew, fungus, bacteria and viruses. (It is 500 times thinner than a human hair strand) Items such as stents can be coated, and this will create anti sticking features. Catheters and sutures which are a source of infection will cease to be problematic.

Technology and Inventions - 2012 is the beginning of so many changes

(A new Industrial Revolution and Scientific Revolution will begin.)

Microsoft – For 2012 Microsoft will think about negotiate with Nokia to start making its own phones. Not sure how that will work, but something is going on with Microsoft and we will know all about it but fall. It will unveil a model that will be superior to the iPhone. Around the summer time, we will hear about a Microsoft-Skype. This will be the most important achievement in office telecommunications since email. Microsoft's success will cause the stock soar!

People from all different backgrounds are seeking a direct experience of the divine, and conventional religious theology does not satisfy the inner longing. Starting in February 2012 until 2025, I see the people looking for something that only a higher level of conscious awareness can satisfy their ideals and dreams.

I see a more advanced trend of “designer” drugs – which will be created to evoke specific experiences.

The legalization of marijuana for medical use, and its adoption by pharmaceutical companies for profit, is likely to come quickly.

I see that the ways we entertain ourselves are about to change. The games like Wii will make a transformation into a more realistic virtual setting.

Televisions will go beyond what you and I call 3-dimensional to provide an experience that intensifies all the human senses beyond what the human experience can offer on its own. This new technology is being introduced and T.V images are natural (life like) views of life. Better than any 3D, and different from any holographic display that we have ever seen, they are absolutely real- like and we will get lost in the believing of this virtual world.

To be sure, this will result in a new type of addiction as subtle forms of sensory stimuli of this world take a back seat. One of the most glaring will continue to be in the sexual arena. Dysfunction in a growing number of men and some women for whom a sexual experience with a live person cannot compete. We have a desire to merge with a greater experience that goes beyond the limits of our senses. Because of this, life could become much more confusing as the veils between the realms are easier to traverse.

Wireless Electricity: I see there is no problem that electric devices like computers, cell phones T.Vs, and electric vehicles and so on will automatically recharged by wireless technology.

I see a bus- like creation that cars seem to run through but this bus- like type of transportation can carry a thousand or more people in it and travel high speeds on our expressways, stopping at regular intervals to load and unload people.

Scientists will partner with Hollywood studios to unveil a new technology known as “Fresh Ends.” Fresh Ends technology will generate new endings for some of the world’s most popular films. (I am not sure how this will work but what I do see is it is adding money to the box offices.

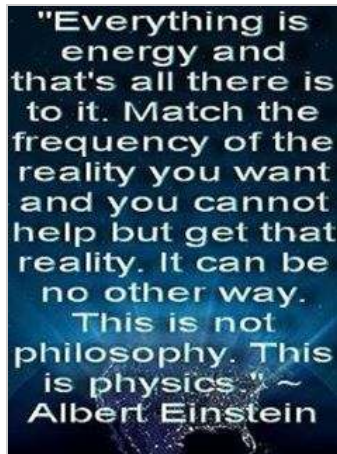

Hollywood Stars and Fashion for 2012

- 1. Anderson Cooper being nominated for an Emmy Award*
- 2. Another marriage Kim Kardashian and possible a baby*
- 3. Leo D’Caprio will once more be in love.*
- 4. Nickolas Cage will likely split from his wife*
- 5. Jack Nicolson and Sylvester Stallone will struggle with health issues*
- 6. Donald Trump could be getting rid of his comb over.*
- 7. We need to keep our eye on Sarah Palin I see changes for her*
- 8. Julia Roberts will do more directing, and she is very good.*
- 9. Maria Shriver will go into politics (remember she is a Kennedy)*

As for the Fashion trend for 2012

1. Platinum hair for men and women
2. Red lips will be all the rage
3. A lot of the 50's look we will see back
4. We will see more make up for men and them wearing it

A few thoughts on what this monumental year of 2012 represents:

We need to remember that there always will be natural disasters. It has been since the beginning and there continues to be. Disasters include illness, wars, shifts of power and all of the usual human creations. We are seeing changes in institutions such as governments, religions, business, and etc. Individuals are responding to emotional and economic issues. Our planet is reacting with increased activity visible through the weather patterns and the land upheavals itself, which is redefining our map. For us we are experiencing the end of an old world order and the beginning of a new way. The transition started long ago and will continue for long after 2012.

This is a powerful year because it has long been focused on. The ancient cultures and civilizations have prophesied about this year itself and the gateway of what it represents. 2012 is a turning point rather than an end point or a clear beginning. We will see breakthroughs of many powers. Not only sustainable power sources for the future but power of the people. We are feeling the power of relationships between each other and those in your life. We are re-thinking the government, its structure and our business ethics. We are working towards a sustainable power that will include the consideration of this planet we are living on. We need to honor our planet as a living organism and recognize it is entering a different cycle of her lifetime. This year we will see a momentum around planetary solutions and integrate them to become part of our life and consciousness. Somehow or another we are evolving to a more refined level of that oneness the great sages all talk about. We have the vision of how things all work together and all things play an equal role.

2012 will be a year for pioneers and revolutionaries. Put that energy together and we see evolutionary creation right before our eyes.

It will be a year of action for individuals and for our collective movements. Technology is not the focus of power at this time, although technology will continue to move forward as it needs to. What we are witnessing is people power.

For people-power to rise, the heart is always required. Isolation will fall away and the shifting consciousness is becoming true in our bodies. We are rebuilding, we are speaking from our spirit more than ever before. We will need our feet planted firmly on the ground, so our spirit senses can work through and with our physical senses. We have grown bored of the old template; we are opening up and integrating our world with our spiritual awarenesses.

This is our evolution and our creation - it is perfect. The old template no longer holds the wonder it did. It is the evidence of the disconnection that is present in so many of the old ways. At the time it connected us, but now we need something different. The boldness of this year will be unique. 2012 is the year of Power, from different angles and different perspectives. We are realizing the power of our heart, our voice and our spirit, and actualizing these powers in our actions. This is how we are creating a planet of new human consciousness.

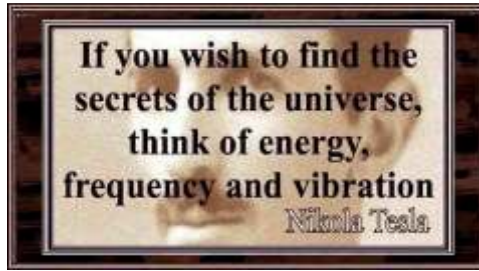

One thing we can do is to recognize that we are the person that can reset the balance for ourselves. We can become the ambassador of love and silence and this will be felt by others. The more this is felt by others the more it becomes shared between people. This is a sharing planet. We are a spark of life that is animating flesh and bone.

When we have done all we can, then we must let nature work it out. This is such a simple thought but most difficult to apply in our lives. This is the year of Power, that power is YOU.

Thoughts and Predictions from Rev. Donna Fischer

I do not have much to say on the changing of our material world. Rev. Bacon has done a pretty thorough job of that. President Obama had no idea what he was saying, nor did we as he was voted into office, when he promised change and we went for it. Be careful what you ask for. Change is in the air and we are no longer in our comfort zones. We – all of us – are busy developing a new normal. But I am here to tell you, do not become comfortable in your new normal as more changes are on the horizon. But once “the dust settles” and our houses are put back in order, we will be amazed at all we’ve been part of and witness to. History is being made on a global stage with this massive economic and sociological upheaval. These changes bring out the creativeness in human beings in general and Americans in particular. As we work to keep our lives balanced, we are forced to dig deep within to find alternative solutions. Basically we are thinking “out of the box” more and more just to maintain.

The year 2012 will bring an increased awareness of the spiritual nature to many, including those who previously would say they don’t believe in “that stuff”. This is brought about initially by our search to keep ourselves balanced in the material world. At first, it is accidental but gradually we want to learn more of this amazing world within.

This won’t come – for the most part – in sudden flashes of enlightenment but more subtly slipping into the consciousness. Previously long held beliefs will undergo major shifts in many and complete revisions in some. I am not talking about the television psychic or ghost hunter programs. Once people get a peek into their spiritual world, they will look at those tv shows as child’s play.

Exciting and scary all at the same time but nonetheless, it’s on the horizon for all those open and willing to embrace that which is coming for us.

And so it goes for another year.

May God and the Angels Bless all through the year 2012.
